Did You Know?

On the 1819 map of Hounslow and Isleworth there is a stream that formed the parish boundary between the parishes of Heston and Isleworth, both of which shared the town of Hounslow between them.

The boundary stream is variously known as the Hounslow Brook or the Isleworth Bourne and it rises in Lampton Park, flowing through a Marshy Meadow (shown on Moses Glover's Map of 1635) in front of the Blenheim Centre and across the Holloway Road - Alexandra Road Car Park towards the eastern end of the town's High Street.

Today this is a forgotten waterway and what remains of it is piped and runs underground and out of sight – beneath the site of Hounslow Town School. But its course can be traced, parallel to that of the London Road and a little to the south of it, along the backs of the houses on the north side of Pears Road and the backs of the houses at the southern end of Alderwick Drive, to the east heading for Bridge Road and St. John's Road where the stream turns south-eastwards towards Old Isleworth.

Osterley Station

TfL have announced the next six London Underground stations to benefit from the Mayor of London's £200m investment in improving step-free access over the next five years.

Osterley Tube station has been confirmed as one of these next six stations along with Amersham, Buckhurst Hill, Mill Hill East, Cockfosters and South Woodford. These six stations will join Harrow-on-the-Hill and Newbury Park that were confirmed last year.

The Mayor's £200m investment, the biggest in the Tube's 153-year old history, will bring the total number of Underground stations with step-free access to all platforms to more than 100. This represents more than 40 per cent of the network and will significantly increase the proportion from the current level of 26 per cent.
